

a little money now. This will help you along. We want to treat you right. There is more for you when you want it."

"I got Fitzpatrick of the Chicago Federation of Labor on the phone and told him what was doing. He told me to go along and later we would show up Malter."

"Three days later Malter phoned me he would meet me in his motor car at Ashland and Madison st. at 6 o'clock in the evening. I met him. We rode to Mike Doyle's cafe at Oakley blvd. and 12th st. He sprung the same line of dope he had at his office the Saturday before. Then he handed me a check for $75. He asked whether I had cashed the other one for $25. I said no. He wanted to look at it. I gave it to him. Then he marked both checks. 'Em. as alister.' He explained this would protect both of us as I would appear on his payroll as a solicitor. I asked him why he didn't pay cash. He said he had to account to his organization for the money and the only way to do it was for me to appear on his payroll as working for him.

"I then took the $75 check, turned it in to the executive board of the Chicago Federation of Labor and talked it all over with federation officers and with Emmett Flood of the A. F. of L. We decided the best thing was to show up Malter as a sample of the Chicago employer who uses dirty money in an attempt to tunnel on the inside and wreck a union through the treachery of an officer."
